1.3.5: Schemes to support poor students from low- or lower-middle income countries

As part of its student financial-support schemes, Misr International University provides grants to eligible students to reduce financial barriers to higher education and support the continuation of their studies.

In 2025, a total of 565 students received grants from MIU. Among these beneficiaries, 21 students were from low- or lower-middle-income countries as classified by the World Bank. This includes 11 students from Syria, 4 from Sudan, 3 from Palestine, and 3 from Yemen. (Syria, Sudan, and Yemen are classified as low-income economies, while Palestine is a lower-middle-income economy).

Through these grants, MIU supports students whose educational opportunities may be affected by conflict and instability, helping them access and continue their university education.
