16.2.6 Academic freedom policy

The university upholds and actively promotes academic freedom as a foundational principle, as codified in our publicly accessible research independence policy. This policy explicitly guarantees both research and teaching freedom for all academic staff, irrespective of seniority, protecting the right to pursue inquiry and disseminate knowledge without undue restriction. The policy ensures a supportive environment for intellectual exploration and public discourse, solidifying our commitment to a robust and dynamic academic culture.

The university's code of ethics also elaborates on research independence and research ethics.

To highlight its strong institutional commitment to scientific research, the university publishes this regular update (Research Hub). It serves as a central hub for tracking research developments, outcomes, and collaborative opportunities within our academic community.
